Definitions

Accessibility – providing equitable access to space, information, resources and opportunities to all individuals. Access for all requires organizations to go beyond compliance of public accommodations and law (e.g. Americans with Disabilities Act) and strive for inclusive design. Accessibility efforts should be continuous with community participation.

Culture of Inclusion – an environment in which people with different identities, abilities, and beliefs are equally valued, respected, and welcomed at all times.¹

Diversity – the practice of bringing people with unique perspectives and life experiences to the decision-making table. This practice focuses on including people with differences in race, ethnicity, nationality, gender, religion, sexual orientation, socioeconomic status, language, disability, age and political perspective.^{2,3}

Equity – the fair and just treatment of all members of the community. Equity requires a commitment to strategic priorities, resources, respect, and continuous action and assessment of progress toward achieving these goals.⁴

Inclusion – ensuring diverse individuals feel welcomed and can participate fully in all aspects of an organization or program, including the decision-making process. Inclusion is met once your organization, your employees and your programs are inviting to all people.²

- Provide a welcoming environment to all.
- Ensure accessible spaces, in-person and virtual, are appropriately provided and maintained.
